IVORY-BILLED WOODPECKER PILEATED WOODPECKER Campephilus principalis Dryocopus pileatus Red crest on males only Red crest on females and males Face has alternating bands of black and white White markings Face is black extend down the behind bill back σ Slightly smaller White feathers than the on lower half of Ivory-billed winas Woodpecker

Once believed extinct, the Ivory-billed Woodpecker is extremely rare with sightings limited to remote river bottoms. The Ivory-billed Woodpecker is the largest woodpecker in Arkansas, distinguishable by large amounts of white on the lower halves of its wings. Its call is a series of nasal sounds similar to a child's toy horn, often referred to as the "kent" call.

The Pileated Woodpecker is fairly common in Arkansas with many sightings in urban back yards. About the size of a crow, this woodpecker may also inhabit areas considered ideal for the Ivory-billed Woodpecker. There is very little white visible on the back of the bird. The call of the Pileated is a very loud, accelerating series of notes, sounding like "kuk kuk."

Illustrations courtesy of Roger Tory Peterson. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Company. All rights reserved.

More information is available through the AGFC Web site at www.agfc.com or contact us toll free at (800) 440-1477 • E-mail: ivorybill@agfc.state.ar.us

Identifying Field Marks of an Ivory-billed Woodpecker and similar birds in flight

In flight - view from below

- Ivory-bill has white trailing edge on wing; Pileated is dark.
- Ivory-bill is more slender than Pileated, and slightly larger at 20 inches.

- Ivory-bill has white trailing edge on wing; Pileated is dark.
- Ivory-bill has two white stripes that converge on lower back.
- Woodpecker Ivory-billed Ivory-bill has pale Pileated has ivory bill; dark bill.

of wing

Woodpecker

Pileated

Woodpecker Red-headed

Wood Duck

Conservationists and sportsmen have helped conserve large tracts of land for waterfowl habitat, and they are largely responsible for saving the Ivory-billed Woodpecker. These identification tips will help anyone who spends time in bottomland hardwoods distinguish an Ivory-billed Woodpecker from a Pileated Woodpecker and other similar birds. A glimpse is often the most a birder can hope for - study the illustrations carefully.

Illustrations © David Allen Sibley.